SPEED INDEX
WHAT IT IS
and
HOW TO USE IT
Daily Racing Form's new Speed Index is actually four information-packed tools in one. The Speed Index figures, evaluating every horse's speed record, provide a rapid calculation of speed ability.
The Speed Index par is 0.0. A rating of 0.0 is better than all minus (-) ratings and inferior to all plus (+) ratings. The higher the plus rating the better; the lower the minus rating the worse.
A Speed Index figure of +6 is better than an Index of +2.
On the minus side, a -2.8 Speed Index is better than a -5.6 (since -2.8 is closer to the 0.0 par). A dash within parentheses (-) indicates the horse has no Speed Index for the distance and track surface.

There are four Speed Index categories for each horse:
• The first one (farthest to the left) is computed for the most recent start at today's conditions. Conditions refer to distance (shorter than one mile or one mile or longer) and surface (dirt or grass).
• The second Speed Index number is computed for the three (or fewer) most recent starts at today's conditions. The horse's three most recent Speed Index numbers for the applicable races are totaled and divided by the number of starts (up to three) to reach an average.
• The third Speed Index number is computed from all starts, but only for races with conditions similar to those of today's (to a maximum of 12).
• The fourth Speed Index number is computed from ALL starts, (up to the 12 most recent races), without regard to distance or track surface.
Each of the four Speed Index categories must be regarded separately. The reader should first rank the top three or four horses in the first category, then do the same for the three other categories. Then, by reading the rankings for each horse in each category, a quick determination can be made as to the horse's overall speed capability.

RACES RANKED in ORDER OF IMPORTANCE
Races in the order of their relative importance are grouped roughly as follows, stakes events, of course, being tops:
Stakes (allowance, handicap, weight-for-age, scale weight.
Overnight races (allowance, weight-for-age, special weights, handicaps.)
Graded allowance races and graded handicaps.
Maiden and maiden allowance races.
Combination races.
Claiming races.
The importance of a match race is dependent upon the quality or popularity of the contestants. It might overshadow a stake event, or engage mere platers.
The importance of a claiming handicap or stake, also is dependent upon the quality of the horses, as indicated by their entered price

Allowance Purses, Lifetime Statistics Improve Past Performances

Daily Racing Form now includes two new features in its past performances—additional data that will make the past performances more complete and valuable than ever before to the racing patron and the racing industry.

The new past performance features are: Value of purse for allowance races, for all such races going back to January 1, 1980. Lifetime statistics for every horse, updated with each start, showing number of career races, wins, seconds, thirds and total earnings.

Following is an explanation of the new data: ALLOWANCE PURSE: Until now, there may have been some difficulty determining the class of horses whose past performances lines showed they had run in allowance races. Especially when horses competed at the same track, there was no ready guide to compare the quality of one allowance race field with another. With the addition of the purse for each allowance race, however, the reader now has a guideline as to the relative class of horses.

As a general rule, and stated quite simply, the higher the purse at a given track, the better the horses in the field. Just as claiming price information in the past performances is an indication of a horse's class, purse values may serve as a similar guide.

The new data is carried in the "class of race" portion of the past performance line as follows:

Landing Strip

Own.—Willis B O

Table with columns for race dates and performance times.

Complex graphic element resembling a magnifying glass with a handle, containing text about allowance races and purse values.

(See Example 1) This means the total value of the purse for that allowance race was $9,000. The purse information is shown for races going back to January 1, 1980. The purse value, of course, is just one of many factors in judging the quality of allowance race fields. Smaller tracks, with smaller wagering handles, offer smaller purses—a factor to be considered in the case of a horse shipping from one area to another. The purse values do not reflect any other eligibility conditions of allowance races.

However, there is no change in the listing of maiden allowance races and starter allowance races. Purse values are not shown for these races. Maiden allowance events continue to be indicated as "Mdn". Starter races continue to show the claiming price requirement and are printed as in the past, as "A 10000's." It is important to remember that in starter allowance races the figure given is claiming price eligibility and not the purse.

LIFETIME STATISTICS: This information, updated every time a horse starts, includes all of his races, on the dirt, grass and over the jumps. It is inclusive of the season's record for the current and previous seasons and will be printed as follows:

Lifetime: 58 9 8 15 $70,991

(See Example 2)

This information may be significant in the case of older horses who have not had too much racing activity this year or last.

In addition to these significant improvements in Daily Racing Form past performances, another new feature concerns horses foaled in Canada. The province where a horse was foaled is shown printed in parentheses after the name of the breeder. Until now, the all-inclusive term "Canada" was printed. This has been replaced by the abbreviation for province followed by the letter "C" (for Canada), just as the abbreviation for each individual state of foaling is shown for horses bred in the United States. This information should be of particular significance to the Canadian breeding and racing industries.

The provincial abbreviation used are as follows: Alberta—Alb-C; British Columbia—Bc-C; Manitoba—Man-C; New Brunswick—Nbr-C; Newfoundland—Nf-C; Nova Scotia—Ns-C; Ontario—Ont-C; Prince Edward Island—Pe-C; Quebec—Que-C; Saskatchewan—Sas-C.

With all of this additional information and improvement, Daily Racing Form past performances continue to be—now more than ever—the definitive capsulation of horses' racing records and current form.

A remembrance of racing's past... a history of the sport— from The American Racing Manual of 1947

The first racing stock brought into the New World after its discovery by Columbus was introduced by the earliest Spanish explorers of the West Indies. The first landed on the North American continent were horses which came with the army of Cortez when he invaded and conquered Mexico in 1519. They were of Oriental and Spanish blood.

What we term organized racing did not begin until 1665, when Nicolls, the first English Royal Governor of New York, laid out a course on Long Island, in the same locality where the Belmont Park, Aqueduct and Jamaica tracks now are, and named it Newmarket, after the great English turf center. This locality has since been the head-center of the American turf and racing almost continuously has gone on there except during the winters.

About the same time the sport was being established in Maryland and Virginia, but on another basis. There it took the form of quarter-racing, as the wilderness of the country precluded anything else, and it was not until about 1730 that course-racing began there, as a going concern. The first thoroughbred stallion imported into this country from England, Bulle Rock, by the Darley Arabian, was brought into Virginia in 1730, and thereafter a steady stream of them set in, together with many mares, who were the foundation stock of the American thoroughbred breed of today.

Racing became the great popular sport of the Colonies, outside New England, before the Revolutionary War, and was widely carried on. That war, which lasted about seven years, did much to retard its progress, as it was conducted precisely in those parts where turf and stud were most flourishing—in and about New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, in the North, and Maryland, Virginia and Carolina in the South. As soon as the war was over, work at once began to repair damage and in but a few years great progress was made. This again was interrupted by the War of 1812 (which, in fact, lasted until 1815), with further losses, but again peace brought reconstruction and greater progress than ever. This lasted until the Civil War of 1861-65 virtually brought everything to a standstill for that period, and from its effects many of the best breeding and racing centers of the Old South never recovered.

Since 1865 no wars have visited the United States, but the country engaged in several, including World War II. All have affected the turf, but none had any widespread disastrous consequences up to 1943, and in 1942 the sport attained an expansion and a prosperity hitherto unheard of.

Radical Changes Made in Sport Through the Years

The evolution of the turf and of the American thoroughbred breed proceeded steadily, despite all adversities and drawbacks, to the high estate that they have reached today and that they bid fair to sustain hereafter. There has never been a time since that first race course on the continent was laid out on Long Island in 1665 when the popularity of racing was so universal throughout the entire country as it now is, or the interest in it so intense and so widely disseminated.

Within the period of almost three centuries, however, it has undergone almost incredible changes. In its earliest days it was chiefly a matter of matches, as a rule between but two horses. Gradually this competition broadened until fields of horses became the rule. But for a long time all these horses had to be owned or entered by members of the jockey clubs conducting the meetings, and events like almost all those of the present day, which are thrown open for general competition, were unknown. The status of the sport was long aristocratic, following the English pattern. Meetings were short and were conducted along sporting and non-commercial lines. There were few professional horsemen. Racing plants were modest and primitive. Betting was a purely man-to-man affair. In the South almost all trainers and jockeys were Negro slaves and the South, owing to its climate and other advantages, was the greatest racing and breeding ground until after the Civil War.

At that time the control of the sport passed to the North and became centralized in New York, where it has since remained. The system of racing was also changed. Hitherto it had been heat-racing at long distances, with four-mile heats the test of every great horse. Two-year-old racing was not practiced, as it was thought its effects were detrimental to later excellence. With few exceptions, purses were small, seldom exceeding $1,000 in value, and what we now term stakes, especially for large sums, were great rarities. Owing to the length and severity of the contests, many of the champions of that period ran only a few times a year and sometimes were pointed for but one all-important race.

All this was changed after the Civil War. Heats were gradually eliminated, long distances were steadily shortened, two-year-olds came to the front and became a cult, purses and stakes for large sums were introduced and became a pivotal part of the system, meetings were transformed from purely sporting to commercial undertakings, professional horsemen who devoted themselves to training, racing, track-managing and breeding took the place of those who had done so on a more or less amateur basis, and, above all, betting became organized and systematized, with far-flung machinery for keeping the public informed regarding both the contests themselves and the form of the horses, independent of them, in support of which the statistical records and their keeping and publication became one of the chief departments of all turf enterprise.

Breeding first reached an important status in Colonial Virginia and Maryland, but after the Revolution it was not long in moving westward and being centralized in Kentucky, which has since been the great production center. After the discovery of gold in California and the famous "Gold Rush" of 1849, the thoroughbred was carried across the Great Plains to the Pacific Coast, where he has since played such an important part. Tennessee was at one time one of the foremost breeding and racing states, but adverse legislation, which at one time or another has exercised a depressing effect upon the sport, has removed it from the map. Such legislation, which has at various periods been given sway in almost every state of the Union, is now, however, almost wholly a thing of the past, having been replaced by state control and supervision created by law. From this source New York alone collected over $10,000,000 in taxes in 1942. In addition to these imposts, the sport raised voluntarily $3,000,000 for War Relief, besides other millions, in indirect ways, for war purposes.

More than 6,000 thoroughbreds are now being raised annually in North America, and, as the statistics show, more than $18,000,000 was raced for in 1942 by almost 15,000 horses of all ages from two-year-olds upward. America has now produced the vast majority of the world's greatest money-winning race horses, it gives the most valuable stakes ever run for in the history of the world, its winning sires and dams have broken all records, at home and abroad, for the earnings of their progeny, while American breeders, owners, trainers and jockeys also hold similar distinction in their departments.
