Fundamentals of Handicapping

CONSISTENCY

The raw material of handicapping is contained in the past performance pages, official result charts, jockey and trainer standings, workout reports and columns of news and commentary published in the Daily Racing Form. Individual methods of interpreting and evaluating this material vary widely, but the substance of handicapping is far more significant than the procedures devised by its practitioners. No matter what his school of thought may purport to be, and no matter how elaborate the gadgetry, graphs, tabulations and worksheets he may use, the handicapper's effectiveness remains below par until he applies his skills to the full range of available information.

Here in brief review are some of the more salient aspects of the interrelated factors on which successful handicapping depends:

CLASS

The published conditions of each race describe the horses eligible for entry. A horse whose record is so good that he barely qualifies for the race can usually be accepted as suited to his class, provided that he is fit and likes the distance.

For example, if the race is an allowance purse for 3-year-old non-winners of three races other than maiden or claiming, great respect is due any fit starter who not only has won two allowance races (the uppermost limit of eligibility), but has beaten older horses in the process. On the other hand, a horse who has won but one allowance race, and that against mere 3-year-olds, can be suspected of insufficient class in this particular company, unless he is a lightly raced animal from a leading barn and has not only done everything asked of him but has done it in exceedingly impressive time.

The Daily Racing Form official result charts are vitally important in this phase of handicapping. They show the purses for which a horse has been competing, the ages and sexes of his previous opponents and in, claiming races, the top price for which horses were entered. Thus, the charts may reveal that a horse dropping in claiming price is not really dropping in class, because the eligibility conditions of his present race are identical with those under which he ran last time.

A horse must be conceded a distinct edge in class if he recently has beaten or run close to better animals than his present opponents have been able to handle. In the absence of such a contender, attention may be drawn to a horse dropping in class to a level at which he previously has run well, especially if his recent losses seem attributable to uncomfortable footing, odd distances, or the basic superiority of other horses, rather than to physical unsoundness.

Animals best able to move up in class and win are those who have won decisively in their latest outings or who seem to be rounding into form after temporary deterioration or a long layoff. Legitimate contenders in their own right, horses of this kind do especially well when the supposed "class" horses in the race are running at an unsuitable distance or are in poor form or are unable to cope with the pace at which the race is run.

FORM

A good recent race may be a sign of competitive sharpness. Or it may be a warning of imminent trouble. To win or lose by a narrow margin in a long, driving finish requires sufficient exertion to blunt the edge of the average thoroughbred, especially if his previous race was also an all-out effort. This is particularly true of females and older horses.

A claiming or ordinary allowance horse who has given his all twice in the last two weeks, and is now back for more, is seldom as sharp as one who has recently demonstrated improvement by producing high early speed or an energetic, gaining finish—even though losing by lengths. Another good prospect is a horse who seemed to be rounding into form prior to his last race but lost it because he suffered interference or was outclassed or over weighted or entered at the wrong distance or on a track too wet for his liking.

If a horse's most recent performance was inexcusably poor, he can be presumed to be off form. The longer the time since his last race, and the sparser his workouts, the stronger the presumption. Even when a good race is followed by a long workless absence, unfitness should also be suspected, except in the rare case of a horse that runs best after such vacations.

High-grade allowance horses and other superior thoroughbreds hold their form longer than claiming stock does, being sounder. They can be forgiven more protracted absences from competition. But their workouts should be frequent and swift.

At any class level, the seemingly unfit horse can be written off. And the likeliest contender in terms of fitness is the one whose record shows frequent, recent competition, signs of improvement in the last performance or two, and at least one workout during any week in which he did not race.

Each horse is most comfortable at a specific distance, although some are able to win at several. Handicappers usually are reluctant to assume that a horse successful at a shorter distance will win at a longer one until the horse proves the point himself. The animal most likely to win at a new, longer distance is one who has been gaining in the stretch. And a horse who has been fading in the stretch often benefits from a shorter race, provided he has the early speed necessary to keep pace.

Sprinters accustomed to running no farther than six furlongs around one turn occasionally win races around two turns at a mile and beyond, but not often. Horses that have been running at longer distances seldom are threats in a sprint. Exceptions arise in either case when the animal is favored by racing luck or by the kind of pace that kills off more logical contenders.

PACE

Horses who contend for the early lead are best situated when unopposed by other front-runners of equal speed and class. Horses who press the pace, running just behind the early leaders, profit when the speedsters tire each other. Horses who begin sluggish, and specialize in one run, must circumnavigate other horses to find room for their dramatic stretch efforts. Their chances are best when a speed duel pickles the front-runners and no pace-forcing type has the form or class to exploit the opportunity.

Pace is best analyzed by noting the running styles of all starters, and the fractional times at which they perform most successfully. Having reckoned with the effects that an unfit, outclassed or otherwise misplaced horse might have on the early pace, it often is possible to blueprint the performances of the real contenders, predicting with accuracy which of them will probably be on the head end at the finish. The detailed fractional times printed in the result charts are invaluable for such study.

RIDER

If the rider has won with the horse in the past, or has been winning upwards of 15 per cent of his starts, the animal is at an advantage. Apprentice riders usually are a boon to fast-starting sprinters and a hindrance in longer races, which reward the experienced jockey's ability to judge pace and conserve a horse's energies.

No rider, regardless of his record, has the power to make a winner of a horse who is unfit, outclassed, overweighted, entered at the wrong distance, or unsuited to the pace of the race. But a leading contender with a leading rider in the irons moves ahead a jump or two by comparison with one whose rider has not only been unable to win with him but has been finishing first on a low percentage of mounts.

MUD

A review of result charts shows whether the particular track becomes slower when it is sloppy. Most do not. The slop generally favors front-runners, who can run as freely in puddles as on dry surface, and have the extra advantage of splashing gritty water at their pursuers. Slow, muddy or heavy tracks tend to tire most front-runners. The wisest choice in such conditions is a fit animal who has run well on a holding track in the past. If other evidence is missing, most handicappers favor stretch-gaining types in the mud.

WEIGHTS

Some horses seem able to run well only when carrying 115 pounds or less. Others can manage 118 but run into trouble at 120 or more, especially at longer distances, or when facing their class equals, or when opposed by another fit, well-placed contender who goes postward under exceptionally light weight. In general, a horse who figures to be a leading contender on grounds of class, form, distance and pace, should be credited with ability to carry any weight that has not slowed him in the past, and often remain a good risk when asked to carry several pounds more. Study of the record, and of the weight advantages of other contenders, will usually resolve such problems.

Ohio Commission Denies Simulcast Meet Proposal

By CHUCK SCARAVILLI

It looks as though the "peaceful co existence" between the thoroughbred and harness racing factions in Ohio is about to come to an end.

The activity at the monthly Ohio Racing Commission meeting this past Wednesday indicates that there may be trouble brewing in paradise.

Wednesday's commission meeting's prime purpose was to allot the racing dates for the upcoming 1990 season for the state's three thoroughbred meetings and its four harness tracks.

After a stormy session, only two tracks, Raceway Park in Toledo, and Lebanon (in Lebanon), both harness meets, had their 1990 date proposals approved. The other tracks' dates were tabled until the next commission meeting on October 27.

The main bone of contention involves an unprecedented proposal by Thistledown General Manager Mike Mackey for a 30-day simulcast meeting beginning January 26 and ending on March 8.

Until Mackey's proposal, Ohio track operators have interpreted the existing statutes as meaning that simulcast races could only be taken on days that "live" racing had been presented at their tracks.

It is Mackey's contention that this is not specifically spelled out in the Ohio statutes and decided to apply for pure simulcast meeting dates to get the commission's opinion and an interpretation from the Ohio attorney general's office.

Ohio Racing Commission Chairman Nelson Lancione clarified the commission's position when he stated that its policy was not to allow any simulcast wagering without live races. The issue was then put to a vote. Three of the commissioners voted against and the other two members abstained.

The reduction of the simulcast wagering situation to a commission policy may lend credence to Mackey's interpretation that simulcast wagering can be conducted without live racing.

Mackey's request for earlier starting dates at Thistledown, whether they be live or simulcast, were met by bitter objections from Northfield Park's owner Carl Milstein.

Milstein maintains that for the last seven years, Northfield Park has been racing rough the winter and that situation should remain intact.

Northfield Park has been the only game in town for the past seven seasons—but Mackey is not the general manager at Thistledown during that period of time. But when Mackey was last at Thistledown—1970 as racing secretary, and 1975 and 1976 as general manager—his applications for Thistledown's racing dates were for as early as January 9 in 1976 and February 28 in 1975.

The other fly in the ointment between thoroughbred and harness tracks in Ohio is the fact that night racing hours are reserved exclusively for the harness tracks—and apparently daylight racing times are up for grabs.

Thoroughbreds are only allowed to conduct racing from noon and 7 p.m.—harness can race from noon to midnight. This appears to be a judicial situation in favor of the harness industry.

When Mackey goes back to the commission meeting on October 27, he will go back with the same date application he proposed at last Wednesday's meeting.

It can be safely assumed that the policy on simulcast wagering meetings will not change. If the commission grants Thistledown the January 26-March 8 dates, it would affect put them in the position of running at least one live race a day and simulcasting the balance of the races from either Gulf-
