CLOSER LOOK: The rail draw might not be such a disadvantage for this late runner; is likely to drop anchor early, avoiding the typical melee first time past the stands; he obviously loves Aqueduct, and the NY form hasn't translated into Derby success in recent years; that said, this colt did everything right in the Wood; didn't get much pace ahead of him yet still unleashed a furious stretch rally to reel in Early Voting, who is no slouch; gives the impression that added ground will be no issue; loved the energy he displayed in his last workout without doing too much; Pletcher has been here many times, and if anyone can thread the needle through Derby traffic it's Irad; don't underestimate.

He's been beaten by double-digit margins in all of the preps he's entered, so that's not great; obviously, he doesn't possess the speed figures or credentials to be considered a serious contender; however, this colt does try very hard and has shown subtle improvement; won't be surprised if there's a stakes with his name on it in the second half of the season; but on this day, have to pass.

This is a serious racehorse; he's a head shy of having won 5 in a row, the only loss coming after setting a fast pace in the Lecomte; has been utterly dominant in his two most recent Fair Grounds preps, albeit with good trips; though, he showed a new dim ension last time, rating just off the speed; that experience could come in handy here, as he seems destined for a similar in-the-pocket trip having drawn inside; couldn't be doing any better coming into the race; has looked like a compressed spring, read y to explode, in his last couple of workouts; could vie for favoritism, but may not be as short a price as it seemed just weeks ago; the one to beat.

Speedy Dubai-based colt is a Kentucky-bred but comes here with an international set of human connections; had never raced beyond 7F prior to the UAE Derby, and was something of a surprise 2nd in that race; may have benefited from the speed-favoring nature of Meydan, and was clearly no match for today's rival Crown Pride; hard to consider him a legitimate contender, but he nevertheless figures to have an impact on this race, as he has a quick reaction time at the start and should be intent on making the lead over his American rivals; know him early.

Was arguably the leading contender for this race over the winter; however, he's lost some luster, having gone down to defeat as the favorite in both 3Y0 preps; wasn't inclined to hold the Risen Star against him since he was off a layoff and was somewhat conservatively ridden; however, he was decidedly 2nd best to Zandon in the Blue Grass; covered a bit more ground, but got the jump on that rival and had no answer in the lane; hasn't looked quite as zippy in his training since that race as he had earlier in the year; will be a price for those willing to keep the faith, but feels like he's been eclipsed.

Switched into Yakteen's care just in time to pick up enough points to qualify, but make no mistake—all of his serious training was done with Baffert; his Lewis was the fastest prep of the season, but he benefited from a speed bias that day; confirmed his improvement in the SA Derby, as he took a stutter step away from the gate before advancing into a stalking position; ultimately had no answer for Taiba's late surge; he's a free-running colt who travels well, but isn't necessarily a fighter; Velazquez may be looking for a similar trip to the one he worked out on Medina Spirit, but there's much more early speed in this year's race; one to consider.

Japanese colt has captured the fancy of many with his globe-trotting resume and unconventional morning training routine; there's obviously talent here, as he won his first two starts in Japan with ease before a rough trip was his undoing in the Hyacinth; was a grinding winner of the UAE Derby, obviously suited by the step up in trip; having said that, the UAE Derby has not been productive prep for the first Saturday in May; this colt tends to hesitate at the start, but does possess plenty of tactical speed and tends to travel quite keenly; get the feeling his talents are being overestimated due to Japan's recent streak of success on the global stage; demand a square price if backing.

One of a few lightly raced colts in this field, he feels like one that's still a work in progress; obviously brimming with talent, he just came out on the losing end of his debut after battling a very good rival before impressively dispatching of a weaker field in February; was bet down to 3:1 in the Florida Derby, based largely on his ample potential, and ran pretty well; however, his inexperience showed, as he disengaged on the far turn before getting put to pressure, then overreacted to Saez's whip, lugging in through the stretch; of all those with 3 starts or less, he feels like the one who may find the Derby experience too much to handle; mixed signals.

Already a millionaire and 5-time winner, he's been victorious on all surfaces, though he's clearly achieved his most notable success on turf and synthetic; did break his maiden by 14 lengths on dirt last July when unchallenged on the lead; however, it's quite another thing to handle dirt kickback in a 20-horse field; looked pretty strong winning the Jeff Ruby, but it's no guarantee that form will translate here; is training well, but had worked impressively into the Holy Bull and failed to handle the d irt then; as the name implies, he'd be a surprise.

The ML favorite has attracted plenty of buzz this week; it's no surprise that his stunning Blue Grass victory has captivated many; and his sparkling physical appearance and willing demeanor through his recent training have only increased the size of the bandwagon; the Blue Grass was dazzling; he unleashed a devastating turn of foot to settle the score with Smile Happy; those who have followed this horse's career should hardly be surprised by that recent effort, as he's always hinted at serious ability; however, the trip will be key for this deep closer; there's little doubt the talent is there, but how short a price is fair on a favorite who may have to pass 18 runners, give or take?

He's been soundly defeated by a few of today's rivals, but it's no disgrace losing to Derby favorites Epicenter and Zandon; he got sent off at long odds in those last two preps, but his form is nevertheless progressive; and that 96 Beyer matches the figures earned by some with stronger resumes; was perhaps aided by good trips on top of moderate paces in the Risen Star and La. Derby, yet he never gave up on either occasion; has a pedigree to run all day, and stays well in his races; interesting that Plet cher takes the blinkers off, perhaps signaling a change in running style; not the worst longshot to throw in underneath.

He's a real enigma in this race; there's little precedent for a horse with just 2 prior starts winning the Derby, and certainly none in modern times; however, he's only slightly less experienced than Justify, and as with that one there's no denying his talent; he's the spitting image of his sire Gun Runner, possessing that same determination and tenacity; successfully made the leap from a sprint debut winner to G1SA Derby hero in just his 2nd start, so anything's possible, right? Appears to be more of a fighter than stablemate Messier, and gives no hint of distance limitations; Smith may be long in the tooth, but he knows how to pilot a Derby winner; dismiss him at your peril.

He may not be the flashiest runner in this field, but he shows up every time and possesses a versatile running style; former front-runner adapted well to closing tactics in the Fountain of Youth, rallying widest of all to win a roughly run race; wasn't as successful in the Florida Derby, but he got forced to move too soon into a swift pace and paid the price; still not totally convinced that 11/4 miles is ideal for him, but he figures to be a square price and has a savvy rider on his back; some things to like.

Didn't manage to win any of the preps, but earned his way into this Derby by consistently picking up checks (and points); he's a real grinder who doesn't make it look easy out there, but he's steady and will keep coming; however, his top Beyer of 88 is well below the standard set by the top contenders in this field; plus those Arkansas preps were not the strongest in terms of quality; won't be shocked if he rallies past half the field, since he runs through traffic and always tries hard; just feels like a top 5 placing is asking a lot.

The Florida Derby winner has just one blemish on his resume and that came over this Churchill Downs strip; however, it's apparent that he's improved quite a bit since returning as a 3YO; worked out great trips in both the Holy Bull and Florida Derby, but he has a running style that lends itself to staying out of trouble; yet that's never a guarantee in the Derby, and he's one of 7 or 8 horses who will be looking to attain a forward stalking position; appears to be training well, and has the Beyers to get into the mix; some things to like.

Was very much a work in progress early in his career, as he would sometimes refuse to run straight or settle properly; yet something appeared to click into place in that allowance victory two back, and he built on that newfound professionalism in the Ark ansas Derby last time; his top Beyer of 92 is a cut below the other top contenders, and he benefited from the filly Secret Oath getting a difficult trip; he couldn't be training any better and goes out for a dangerous barn; yet, as far as he's come, it's still fair to wonder if he has the temperament to handle the excitement of the Derby; mixed signals.

He was in, then he was out, and now he's back in; this speedster was untouchable at Tampa Bay Downs earlier this year, but didn't run particularly fast speed figures in either of those stakes victories; completely fell apart last time in the Florida Derby, putting forth the kind of non-effort that is hard to explain; Lynch says that he may have displaced his palate, so they're making some minor changes to prevent that; figures to be prominent early, but there's no shortage of speed in this field; has much to overcome.

Tackling the Risen Star in just his 3rd start may have been too much too soon; was no match for a few of today's rivals in there, but the race has come back as one of the strongest preps, producing a number of positive runbacks; this colt is one of those, as he was a gallant 2nd on synth in the Jeff Ruby before proving that he can indeed handle dirt in the Lexington; that said, he's still a bit light on speed figures, and is making his 3rd start in just 5 weeks, which is not Brad Cox's typical style; on the other hand, he stays well and should handle the 10F; a superfecta possibility.

As with the other lightly raced runners in this field lack of experience, not lack of talent, is the chief concern; this colt signaled that he was worthy of a stakes attempt with that facile allowance win back in February, and he handled the step up in trip and company admirably in the Louisiana Derby; was allowed to set a moderate pace and stayed on, though he had no answer for Epicenter's turn of foot; now the waters get much deeper, and it will be difficult for him to contest the pace from this very wide draw; there's ability here, but the obstacles are pretty significant.

Another who was on the bubble until entry day, he was last to sneak into the field, and will also be last to enter the starting gate, barring any late defections; earned his way into this Derby with a runner-up finish in the Rebel, but that hasn't proven to be the strongest prep; was no match for some of today's rivals in two subsequent starts; it's always fun to have Triple Crown stalwart Lukas in the mix on Derby week, but it would be a massive shock if his colt played a significant role in the outcom e.

AE needs one defection by Friday morning to draw into the field; his only victory came against $30k maiden claimers last fall, but he did win by 17 lengths; since then has shown improvement since the switch to synthetic; earned his way into the Derby by finishing 3rd in the Jeff Ruby Steaks; stayed on for a minor award that day while no match for the top two; hard to endorse if he gets in.

The second AE would require 2 defections by Friday to have any hope of participating; achieved G1 success during his juvenile season, but he's been a disappointment as a 3YO; just hasn't been able to make up much ground in any of the preps; the addition of blinkers did little to wake him up in the Blue Grass, as he got a very wide trip on that occasion; probably needs a drop in class to regroup, and this is not it. -David Aragona
