Perceptron

Finally. A handicapping neural network you can tailor your methods.

Perceptron. A handicapping software that allows you to tailor a new kind of neural network to your needs. The primary advantage of Perceptron is that you can decide which factors you want the software to examine. This has tremendous potential.

The dialog box graphic provided shows 16 different pieces of data the neural network will use in the handicapping process. You can take out as many as you want. For example, if you don't want early pace used in the training and subsequent analysis, just click on the 'Early Pace' box and the program won't use it.

If you want to have several different networks that all look at different sets of factors, you can with ease. Creating several networks will allow you to pin point the data that indicates successful horses.

You can also create networks that function in unison. In other words, you can have a network that looks primarily at class and a different network that looks at early speed. Still a third network could be set up to look at speed ratings and win percentages.

Perceptron is a completely different kind of neural network. To visualize how this network functions, consider data such as times, beaten lengths, and class to be individual pieces of information. Each one of these pieces of information is an input to Perceptron. Each piece is assigned a "weight" based on how it affects the outcome of a race.

The importance of this scheme is that inputs to Perceptron can be "disconnected" so that the output or decision of the perceptron neural network can be based on only part of the total race data. The edge is that, as a handicapper, you have a network that will work just as hard to learn why horses finished as they did with only 3 factors and it would if it had used all 16 pieces of information.

track favors early speed. Perhaps class is the dominant factor at your track for stakes races. This neural network not only allows you to pick the factors you want to use, it helps you make the decision. The possibilities are endless. Order your copy today.

EFFECTIVE JULY 1, 1990

and

BUTAZOLIDIN

information will be printed in

AMERICA'S TURF AUTHORITY

Charts

and

Past Performances

as provided to Daily Racing Form by state and/or track officials responsible for the administration of permissive medication programs.

In both the charts and past performances, Lasix is indicated by the symbol L.

Butazolidin is indicated by the symbol B.

When medication information is provided to Daily Racing Form in time for publication on race day, those horses who will race on Lasix and Butazolidin will be listed at the start of the past performances for each race.

Daily Racing Form's new medication information is effective with the racing of July 1, 1990. Any medication prior to that date will NOT be printed.

The following is an example of how the medication is shown in the Medication/Equipment column of a chart and then reprinted in the past performances the next time the horse runs:
